WHAT DOES IT ALL MEAN?

Heres your Primepac guide to sustainability lingo!

Compostable

Compostable means that a product can break down into carbon dioxide, water, inorganic compounds and biomass in small pieces in about 90 days under defined conditions. Compost works because millions of tiny microbes consume the waste and transform the organic material into compost. Compostable materials do not breakdown in landfills or in the ocean.

Our compostable bags are made from a natural corn starch and the printing is done with water based eco-friendly inks — a true alternative to the traditional oil-based plastics that can take up to 1000 years to break down, if at all. Fully certified to meet international standards for both home and commercial composting.

Our compostable tableware is made from natural Bamboo, which means these plates can degrade naturally and safely (and compost in the correct conditions). A non-toxic food grade chemical is added to improve resistance to hot oil and water. These are suitable for microwaving and refrigerating.

Biodegradable

Compostable and biodegradable are often used interchangeably. But they're not the same thing. Biodegradable means that a product can be broken down without oxygen and that it turns into carbon dioxide, water, and biomass within a reasonable amount of time. Now, reasonable is not really defined, but way less than 1000 years, which is how long it takes some plastics.

Recyclable

Recycling means to treat or process things to reuse. Materials like glass, paper, metal, plastic, textiles, and electronics can all be recycled. Sometimes recycled materials are mixed with virgin materials so as not to reduce the quality of the product. Make sure your team is separating recyclables correctly, do your research on what waste materials can actually be collected for recycling in your area to help reduce the amount of landfill waste your business is generating.

Sustainability

At its core, sustainable practise is all about not taking more from the planet than what you give back, or what can be regenerated naturally. The term sustainability is often only used in reference to the environment but it also refers to social and economical impacts as well. Is it time to take a look at your business, and really evaluate which practises are sustainable and which are not?
